Human Rights Workshop

Have you ever attended a Fridays for Future rally? Do you want to know more about what the climate crisis has to do with your human rights?

In this workshop, students get to explore the history of their human rights and relate this to the role current environmental campaigns play in affecting these rights. What should government responsibility look like? What role do we play? Help your students discover ways they can be part of the solution today!

Corrine Tucker is an Human Rights Educator and has worked in the field of education for over 20 years. Having recently completed a Masters in Human Rights, she has combined her educational experience with her passion for children's rights and created #LetThemLearn, an organization which offers workshops aimed at children and young adults giving them an opportunity to become more empowered by understanding their rights.
